To Whom?

? The writer says the addressee doesn't understand the situation of France in regard to the negro. France is in the throes of a revolution. Says that the French people are too much wrapped up in their own troubles to pay much attention to distant injustices. Argues the question of immediate emancipation. Doesn't think it is possible. In a postscript, L. M. Belloc says she is pressed for time. Mentions the Anti-Slavery meeting in the Place Vendome. Thinks the addressee would have better success in London.

Alludes to a promise of the addressee that she, together with the Misses Weston and Miss Chapman, would spend a day at la Celle St.Cloud. The writer hopes to be notified by the addressee of the arrival of her "noble and admirable friend." M. Gustave d'Eichthal, Secretary of the Ethnological Society of Paris, who met Mrs. (Harriet Beecher) Stowe when he gave a report there on the negro race, has charged the writer to forward a letter and a pamphlet to Mrs. Stowe; the transmission of these the writer entrusts to the addressee.

? They missed the addressee, as well as Miss Weston and Miss Chapman, at Madame Belloc's Sunday. They are so absorbed in "Uncle Tom's Cabin" that they hardly allow themselves time to eat. Today Mme Belloc and the writer had planned to spend the evening with the addressee, but they are going to work till midnight or one o'clock, being under pressure to return the copy. The writer will please excuse them in consideration of the cause that detains them, and it would be most kind and gracious of her to compensate them for their loss tomorrow. There are plenty of difficulties in the reading of Uncle Tom's Cabin, which the writer would rather overcome than avoid. She copies a number of phrases from the book with the puzzling words underscored, and thanks the addressee for enlightening her. This book, which has rent her soul,

To Mrs. Maria (Weston) Chapman

«Philadelphia.» The writer has drawn comfort from the addressee's remarks in the Liberator on Thomas Parnell Beach's letter. Has sympathized with the "persecuted brothers" in New England who prefer dungeon and banishment to "servile homage to a worthless Idle Lordly Clergy"; also with the "Three Martyrs of Quincy, Illinois, sentenced for 12 years in the Missouri Penitentiary - 'for informing a poor bondsman how to escape from slavery'." The writer lauds the addressee's conduct at the Meeting of Freeman, and was glad that the nomination of Caroline Weston prevailed. Remarks on the attitudes of Nathaniel Colver and Joshua Pitt. Exhorts the addressee not to give up the woman question. The writer's husband (Robert Moore) has sent a package of small boxes made by himself. The writer encloses $5 for T.P. Beach.

«Philadelphia» The writer heard the addressee "at the memorable epoch in Phil<sup>a</sup>" (the riot in Pennsylvania Hall in 1838). Complains that "the quakers are accomplices «sic» in this bloody carrying on in Newburyport jail." Mentions also Mary Cox and her sister Susan, who have been "as cruelly treated (except the jail) as «Thomas Parnell» Beach, «Stephen Symonds» Foster & others." The writer discourses on the poisonous influence of the love of praise. Through "dear «Lydia» Maria Child she who makes everybody love her" the writer has become acquainted with the addressee and others "of the worthy Sister Band."

«Philadelphia. The writer's path is solitary as her family connections are sectarian and apposed to "modern abolition movements." Exhorts the addressee to continue in her valiant fight for the cause. Mrs. Susan (Cox) Luther has divers times been dragged out of meeting houses and cast into the street for speaking the truth. The writer quotes extensively from a written statement by Mrs. Luther of her sentiments in regard to freedom of expression of religious conviction. The writer was disappointed to find in the notices of the Pennsylvania Convention of the Eastern district that the Philadelphia riots were accorded less probatation than they deserved, except by R. Purvis. The writer seldom sees Lucretia Mott, who is one of the most popular public speakers. However, the writer wants her to be more "ultra" in carrying out her Non-Resisting principles at home. There is a great persecution movement in the Cherry Street meeting of which L. Mott is a member. The writer hopes that "brother Stephen Symonds Foster" will not die, "by such savage cruelty too." It is "passing strange" that the descendants of George Fox should be "some of the prime actors in the Tragedy."

"Athol Place, Braughton, Manchester, Engl.. Gives information on the boxes sent to the Boston fair. The writer has heard Emerson. "And now we have seen and heard the calm, dignified, gentle spirited happy minded High Priest of Transcendentalism. He has pleased us even to delight by his Music & Poetry of Voice & Thought, but he has not electrified us - his Lectures: are an intellectual treat but scarcely a spiritual solace..." Describes Emerson's visit at the writer's fireside. "He speaks well & justly & in high terms of the Abolitionists but by no means seeks the subject of antislavery & seems to regard the work as out of his sphere." The writer hopes to see more of Emerson, for she feels high regard & esteem & reverence for him."
